

Billy Wants It All (The Billy Books Book 7)

Money is essential because it is the means by which we obtain those things we both need and want, and without money our society would not function. In the story Billy wants a skateboard. He doesn't understand why he just can't have it bought for him. He doesn't have to pay anything towards any other costs in the household so why does he have to participate in the cost of a toy? This age is the ideal time for a lesson in money management. However, it's not an easy lesson to learn, and a slightly painful one for a child. But an understanding of the value of money, and how important it is to participate in acquiring it, is a lesson that will stand any child in good stead for the rest of their life. It is important that children learn both the purpose and value of money, and how it fits into the way they live when they become adults. Parents take care of their children's financial needs until they leave education, but from then on a child needs to be able to be independent financially. It is sometimes a painful lesson because whilst they don't have to worry about money, they can be easily misled into a false sense of security. That is, food always appears on the table when they're hungry and clothes in their cupboard or gifts on birthdays and at Christmas. However, the most important lesson a child has to learn is that these things don't appear from nowhere. Someone has to exchange their services/work at a job in order to earn the money to purchase the goods.
